New Orleans, Austin

Aspen, Singapore

We sometimes tend to forget how beautiful our own country is. Worse, we sometimes forget to get out and see it. Above left is the Maroon Bells, outside of Aspen, Colorado. This is one of the most photographed sites in the nation. To the right is downtown Aspen. Below left, with engineers from Applied Materials in Singapore. This is an American company that builds machines used in the manufacture of computer chips. To the right is a bit of Feng Shui in the lobby of National Computer Systems, Singapore.

Montreal

Vienna

Bucharest

The building below is the second largest office building in the world, to the Pentagon, in Washington. This one was built as a showcase to the communist government. Since they were just about broke at the time, you can imagine the resulting economic impact.

Bucharest, Transylvania

Counterclockwise, from the left, "Dracula's Castle," magnificent hilltop fortress/town, dinner with Grace Bauer and our friends, ski country in Romania (who knew?), an incredible castle in the countryside, built by a former king (another German king of Romania, who loved his castles—but paid for this one out of his own pocket), and finally, a palace in downtown Bucharest, still used for some functions today.

Prague

Bridges & Castles

The Prague Castle is one of the largest in Europe, to the left at the bottom picture. Easily seen from the Charles Bridge in that same picture, famous for it's statues that line both sides. As always, you must look up to see some of the great art work. Enjoy these images, and get there if you ever have the opportunity.
